About the Author

NINA FREEDLANDER GIBANS has a background as an arts consultant, manager, teacher, writer, and civic leader. She has received individual grants to discuss contemporary arts issues over radio and to research the material for this book. An advisor to businesses, civic groups, arts groups, and educational institutions on planning, programming, and financial development, she has counseled individual artists and arts managers. She has written and taught on the arts, arts management, and arts issues. Gibans was Executive Director of the Cleveland Area Arts Council and an instructor at the Cleveland Museum of Art; she started the Cleveland chapter of Young Audiences, Inc., and has served on the boards of about two dozen civic and arts organizations. She has served on the national boards of NACAA and ACUCAA. She received the Arts Management of the Year Award from Arts Management and the Arts and Business Council, Inc., in 1974. She was educated at Wellesley and Sarah Lawrence Colleges and earned her Master's degree in aesthetics and art history at Case Western Reserve University. She has lived in Cleveland, Ohio; Kansas; and California.
